Free 'Action Man' Manuals

There's no denying that the state of men's health on the island of Ireland is often poor. However, there are things which can be done to change this situation and men, themselves, can play a key role in doing this. 'Action Man - ten top tips for men's health' is a free Man Manual which explains: (i) WHY an action is needed; (ii) WHAT can be done about it; and (iii) HOW to find support if you need it. Check it out at: www.mhfi.org/ActionMan.pdf

To mark International Men's Day (19th November) 2024, a new print run of this publication (supported by Healthy Ireland within Department of Health and MHFI) is being undertaken, and you are invited to request copies. If you require large quantities (50+ copies), or you are based in Northern Ireland, send an email to menshealthweek@mhfi.org stating:

Take a Moment. Start a Conversation.

The Mental Health Champion for Northern Ireland, Prof Siobhan O'Neill, recently launched a campaign titled 'Take a Moment. Start a Conversation'. This focuses on how simple conversations can interrupt cycles of distressing thoughts; encourages people to talk to anyone who they might be worried about; and recognises that although connecting with someone who is experiencing a mental health crisis can be difficult, starting the conversation can make a real difference. There is evidence that small, everyday, caring conversations can interrupt overwhelming negative thoughts, and make a meaningful difference for people who feel suicidal. ## Training

Free Suicide Prevention Workshops for Construction Sites

Suicide and mental health difficulties are prevalent issues within the construction industry in the Republic of Ireland. Would your building site like to host free General Awareness Training (GAT) workshops which focus upon reducing suicide and mental health stigma, increasing mental health understanding, and fostering help-seeking and help-offering behaviours among site workers? ... The CAIRDE GAT workshop draws upon the latest statistics and evidence-based practices relevant to mental health promotion in the construction sector. Participants will gain the tools and insights to better understand mental health for both for themselves and their peers. Each workshop is free, lasts for approximately 90 minutes, and is delivered by trained GAT facilitators. Expressions of interest are being sought from construction sites who are able to host 2-3 workshops (on the same day) in October / November / early December 2024. Please note that, at the moment, the CAIRDE team can only offer a handful of these opportunities, and it is expected that the available slots will fill up very quickly. It uses a mix of guided online content, video and interactive questions. Participants can pause and recommence the programme at their own convenience. ## Suicide and Male Construction Workers in Ireland

Suicide among male construction workers is reported to be disproportionately high compared to the working age population. However, there is minimal understanding globally of the prevalence and associated factors for suicidal ideation, non-suicidal self-injury, and suicide attempt among this occupational group. A journal article titled 'Prevalence and associated risk factors for suicidal ideation, non-suicidal self-injury and suicide attempt among male construction workers in Ireland' attempts to shine some light on this area. ## The Representation of Men in Regional / Global Sexual and Reproductive Health Policy

The Global Action on Men's Health (GAMH) report, 'Out of Focus: The representation of men in regional and global sexual and reproductive health policy', was published on the 4th of September 2024 (World Sexual Health Day). This shows that men's sexual and reproductive health is, in many respects, poor. For example, men are more likely than women to acquire sexually transmitted infections such as syphilis and gonorrhoea or to be infected by HIV, sperm counts are falling globally, and male sexual dysfunctions - such as erectile dysfunction - are becoming more prevalent. Men are also often reluctant users of services; partly because of gender norms that inhibit help-seeking, but also because services are not geared towards their needs. ## Workplace Interventions Targeting Mental Health Literacy, Stigma, Help-Seeking and Help-Offering in Male-Dominated Industries: A Systematic Review

Mental ill-health and suicide represent a significant proportion of the burden of global disease among men. Connell's relational theory of masculinities provides a useful framework to explore how mental health literacy, mental health stigma, and delayed help-seeking and help-offering behaviours are associated with mental ill-health among men - particularly within male-dominated industries. To address the high incidences of mental ill-health in male-dominated industries, several workplace interventions targeting these outcomes have been implemented. However, no review, to date, has examined the current state of evidence for these interventions or identified the behaviour change techniques used. This article explores this issue. ## Cash Incentives Drive Weight Loss in Men

A major UK study, led by health experts at the University of Stirling, has found that offering financial incentives is effective in helping men to lose weight. 585 men living with obesity across Scotland, England and Northern Ireland took part in the research, and were randomly split into three groups. One received daily supportive text messages plus the opportunity to earn £400 for meeting weight loss goals, the second received only text messages, and the third received no extra support or financial incentive. The men were given targets of 5% weight loss at three months, 10% at six months and maintain 10% weight loss at 12 months - at which point the cash was paid to the group offered the monetary incentive. The research found that, after one year, the men receiving both text messages and the opportunity to get cash lost the most weight.
